Dear Muriel,

rien à faire: I am through. Or rather, "Decision" is. The Macpherson scheme doesn't work. Too many technical complications. I am worn-out and sad. I give up. Instead of killing myself I may go to the country. Finish my book - in Ripper's villa, perhaps (if he wants to have me.) and then? But something always happens.

I'll see to it that you get your check. Sorry I kept you waiting.

I hope Neider may be willing to send the manuscripts back, and all that. The lawyer must take care of the creditors.

I may write some sort of melancholy announcement, for The Nation, perhaps. But it could hardly be as melancholy as I actually feel.

I am afraid I won't come along to see Curtiss Brown tomorrow. The anthology idea is off, anyway - as far as I am concerned.

Thanks for everything. It has been worth while, after all - wasn't it?

As always | yours,

KLAUS
