Dear Ted Wilson:

This is to thank you most warmly for your fine article, and at the same time to apologise that we had to delay its publication at the very last moment for certain technical reasons. The trouble was that we had to wait until long after our deadline for an article my Father had promised us and when it finally came it turned out to be three times as long as originally arranged. You will see, when reading it, that it is not precisely the type of an article which one could reduce to half its size without hurting it considerably. So, all we could do was to postpone another item and for some reason it turned out that nothing could be postponed but your innocent study on Kenneth Burke. By the way, another contributor had to suffer under these same conditions, Christopher's art review looks a little fragmentary and mutilated as it now stands.

However, I am sure that you will forgive and will forget minor incidents of this kind when enjoying the American landscape and the American highways, and the American hitch hikers. Have a good time and don't forget to come to New York again occasionally.

Cordially yours,

KLAUS
M.
