Dear Madame Kitty,

It was awfully sweet of you to send me so many cigarettes, and ^{the} tobacco, and so many notes. Thank you ever so much. I am profoundly touched. Whatever smokeables you can spare and send me will always be highly welcome; I am always short of that damned stuff. But don't go out of your way too much to find any cigarettes for me! I know how difficult it is to get hold of them these days. The pipe tobacco, too, may come handy, as I can trade cigarettes for it; but don't send me too much, as I don't smoke it myself. In any case, I appreciate your kindness and thoughtfulness. Another favour you might do me is, to have a copy of Alfred's new novel sent to me. I am very interested in it -- in general, and also for professional reasons. Maybe I could review it for one of the new literary magazines in Rome (Benedetto Croce's daughter, Elena, is editing a very good literary monthly) or perhaps even for our Army newspaper which is read by hundreds-of-thousands of American soldiers many of whom might be interested in the very topical subject of Alfred's book. ... I don't know if or when I'll see Florence again. I am no longer stationed in the vicinity of that city, which is still so lovely, although it has suffered considerably. Thanks again. The most cordial regards and wishes to you and Alfred;
