Erika Mann's "PEPPERMILL"

Directed by THERESE GIEHSE
Settings designed and painted by ANTON REFREGIER
Musical director: MAGNUS HENNING with
ERIKA MANN as mistress of ceremonies

Sketches and lyrics by W. H. AUDEN, KLAUS MANN, ERICH MUHSAM, ERNST TOLLER and ERIKA MANN. English translations and adaptations by JOHN LATOUCHE.

Music by MAGNUS HENNING, AARON COPLAND, WERNE KRUSE.

1. "The Yodler" THERESE GIEHSE
(By Erika Mann and Magnus Henning. English adaptation by John Latouche)

2. LOTTE GOSLAR

3. "Demagogue" WALLACE ROONEY
(By Ernst Toller and W. H. Auden. Music by Aaron Copland)

4. "Children's Song" SYBELE SCHLOSS
(By Erika Mann and Magnus Henning)
A little German girl of the city streets, through children's songs, the only ones she knows, tells the story of her life . . . of how she wanted to become a great singer but was too poor to study, of how her friend, was killed in an uprising, leaving her entirely alone; and of her sadness at the sorrow of the world.

5. "The Street Lamp Cleaner" JOHN LATOUCHE
(By Erich Muhsam and Werner Kruse; English adaptation by John Latouche)

6. "The Ski Teacher" ERIKA MANN
(By Erika and Klaus Mann. Music by Peter Kreuder)
To the ski teacher everyone — prime ministers, dowagers, kings, radicals and conservatives, are equally comic when they learn how to ski — with one exception, the boy she loves.

7. "Especially for Mr. Winterbottom"
(By Erika Mann and John Latouche; music by Magnus Henning)
The girl SYBELE SCHLOSS
The boy WALLACE ROONEY

8. "Intoxication" LOTTE GOSLAR

10. "SPIES"

(By W. H. Auden and Ernst Toller. Music by Herbert Murril)

The "Spies" — Wallace Rooney, John Latouche, Sybille Schloss, John Beck.

11. "THE LITTLE CIRCUS DANCER" LOTTE GOSLAR

12. "DOCTOR'S ORDERS" THERESE GIEHSE

(By Erika Mann. Music by Magnus Henning. English adaptation by John Latouche)

(By Erika Mann. Music by Magnus Henning. English adaptation by John Latouche)

16. "STUPIDITY TALKS" THERESE GIEHSE
(By Erika Mann. Music by Magnus Henning)

Stupidity herself sings. She tells how she is the world's worst danger, and how extremely proud she is of her power to bring war and misery into being; her one fear is that people sometime will realize that stupidity is worse than all those things that seem to be more dangerous — and then what will become of her?

17. "THE DANCE OF THE VIRGIN" LOTTE GOSLAR

18. "COLD" ERIKA MANN
(Words by Erika Mann. Music by Magnus Henning)

At the pianos: MAGNUS HENNING and DR. FELIX GUNTHER

A NOTE ON "PEPPER MILL"

THOUGH the "Peppermill" is here billed as an intimate revue, it is closely allied to the tradition of "cabaret art," "Ueberbrettel" and "Literatiscche Revuebuhne," which have had a long tradition in the German theatre. "Cabaret" there has a somewhat different connotation than it has in America, that of informal entertainment, staged sometimes in a cabaret, sometimes in a theatre, but always unpretentiously and in intimate surroundings, and not afraid to deal occasionally with serious topics.

The first performance of the "Peppermill" was given on New Year's Eve of 1935, in Munich, at the "Bonbonniere," where Frank Wedekind, the noted playwright, and a brilliant coterie had once staged their famous "Eleven Hangmen" entertainments. It achieved immediate success. After playing for two months to crowded houses, "we left Germany rather suddenly," as Erika Mann once said in an interview.

Its travels began with Switzerland, where it achieved the same success as in Munich, playing three and even four return engagements in Basle, Berne, Luzerne, and other cities. "A veritable psychosis of enthusiasm preceded it," as a writer for the Berne Tagwacht said. From Switzerland it went to Prague, Brussels, Salzburg (for a special performance for Max Reinhardt and his guests) and to other cities and countries, giving in all 1,034 performances before coming to this country, where it is for the first time staged in English. Its title was given it by Thomas Mann, the great German writer recently deprived of his citizenship, father of Erika Mann.

ERIKA MANN at eighteen was a pupil of Max Reinhardt's and appeared in a number of his productions in Berlin. By the time she was twenty, she was well-known for her performance in the leading role of "Anja and Esther," a play by her brother, Klaus Mann, and other successful productions. She continued to act, with intervals out for a trip around the world, until the theatrical crisis in Germany made her think of beginning a new venture in the theatre. That was the "Peppermill," which she originally conceived and staged.

THERESE GIEHSE was for a decade the leading character actress of the Munich Kammerspiele, one of the most noted theatres in Germany, and also played the immortal Mrs. Peachum in many productions of the "Three-Penny Opera" in Berlin and other cities, in Bruno Frank's "Storm in A Teacup," now a London success, and other plays. She has been with the "Peppermill" from its beginning, returning during its vacations to the legitimate stage as a guest player in several countries.

LOTTE GOSLAR made her first appearance at 17 at the Scala, Berlin's largest music hall and scored an immediate success. She has also danced at the Berlin Winter Garden and the Cabaret der Komiker there, and at Voskover and Werich's famous theatre in Prague. She has given solo dance recitals throughout Europe.

MAGNUS HENNING is a young Swiss who refuses to take himself as seriously as music critics sometimes have done, and who has written many songs. Occasionally, as in the "Peppermill," he plays them.

JOHN LATOUCHE here makes his first appearance on the stage, though he has been connected with it in such activities as writing lyrics for "Murder In The Old Red Barn," for Spivy and other nightclub entertainers, and, of all things, as research director for the Russian Ballet. He earned his way through Columbia winning poetry prizes, and will shortly have a book of verse in print.

SYBILLE SCHLOSS was the ingenue lead of the Munich Kammerspiele before joining the "Peppermill."

JOHN BECK comes here from Chicago where he appeared in supper club entertainments.

WALLACE ROONEY is a Yale Drama Workshop graduate, and has played in many summer and winter stock companies. He is known in New York for his radio appearances.
