Dear Christopher, -

"Exhumations" is at least as good as its title, and I am greatly enjoying it. Also, I was very moved to re-read your beautiful piece on Klaus. And although I knew in Ernst Toller quite a different person from the one you picture, I recognised him at once. I recognised, too, the two short stories that appeared ages ago in The New Yorker. Odd, how clearly I remember them. As for the various pieces on Vedanta and the West, you probably know how I feel about that sort of thing and that it is sheer envy with which I view any true believer.

What I liked particularly about that slender volume is its utter sincerity and the fact that it so faithfully mirrors the person who wrote it. Many thanks.

Yours as ever affectionately,
