Dear Billux, -

nous voilà! I hate to bother you but feel only too certain that you are the one person who could possibly take care of this Brian thing. It's an extremely fragmentary piece and I doubt that it is doing him justice. But then there will be a multitude of contributions to that book, perhaps mine will serve some sort of purpose, particularly if and when couched in your lovely English.

I have written to Mrs. Lancaster, explaining that I'd sent these pages to you and that I hoped she'd receive the translation very soon. Actually, she had told me that the deadline was the end of October. I do, however, hope and believe that we shall still be on time.

Yes, it was utterly nice to speak to you on the phone, just as it seems such utter nonsense not to be able to see you. Old friends - Brian was one of them, - but you are alive and very much kicking, whilst I am merely kicking in bed, rather helplessly and longing to look at favourite faces. Well...

So sorry to hear about your eyes! As though life weren't difficult enough without those vicious afflictions!

All the best to you and countless regards from both, my mother and Golo.

Yours as ever affectionately,

PS. The address of Mrs. Marie-Jacqueline Lancaster to whom the translation would have to be sent is:
